TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP

All 12 parties to the Trans-Pacific Partnership signed the agreement on Feb. 4, 2016. However, status as U.S. law may take some time; according to a statement made by Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, this was “just the beginning” of the U.S. review process. “No one should be under any illusions that, because the TPP is being signed today, an up or down vote on the agreement is imminent or that our oversight responsibilities are at an end,” See full summary of the Committee Chairman’s speech, which continues, “If history has taught us anything, it’s that this process can, and often does, take a very long time to complete. In fact, it’s not an exaggeration – or even all that remarkable – to say that it can take years to get an agreement through Congress after it is signed.”
